Excerpt: . . . from each, these thoroughly mixed by turning over together, and divided as before. In cases where the sampling takes a long time and water is lost during the process--eg. , shoddy, which requires to be cut up with scissors--the water must be determined in a large sample of the original material, and again in the smaller sample taken for analysis after division, and allowance made for any loss of water. ii. Analysis of Manures. Before beginning the several operations and analysis which follow, the directions given should be carefully read over, in order that a clear idea of the whole plan to be pursued may be first obtained.
