Warder, ho ! open the castle gate, I would an audience of Duke Albany. No answer, and no stir? this frowning pile Courts slumber early. [Knocks loudly. Warder, warder, ho! Art gone to sleep? Ah! would that I could sleep The slumber of the just, ere kindly night Casts her broad mantle o er the vexed world. For me, this is the quickest, busiest hour Of all day s busy round. Open, I say, Else will I rouse the townfolks to confound Thy coveted repose. [Knocks again, and the Warder appears inside the gate. Warder. - Begone! You cannot enter here to night. Rothesay. - Thou rt saucy, knave. I seek Duke Albany. Warder. - The duke has gone to rest. The garrison Are all abed. The curfew-bell has tolled. The folks are housed, all saving silly lads And love-lorn maids, and suchlike cumberers Whose deeds excuse the honest face of day. Come...
