Reviews

*It in one of the most popular book. I am quite late in start reading this one, but better then never.
Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.

Excerpt: . . . several times over the course of these operations. It is still unclear when these critical reserve stocks will be reconstituted or how much this will cost; however, the Army has estimated it will require at least 10.6 billion to complete this reconstitution effort through 2013 (see table 1). Army officials stated that prepositioned equipment sets worldwide would be reconstituted in synchronization with the Armys overall equipping priorities, when properly funded, and in accordance with the Armys prepositioning strategy, known as the Army Prepositioned Strategy 2015. 13 We recommended in our September 2005 and February 2007 reports that DOD develop a coordinated, department-wide plan and joint doctrine for the departments prepositioning programs. Synchronizing a DOD-wide strategy with the Armys prepositioning strategy would ensure that future investments made for the Armys prepositioning program would properly align with the anticipated DOD-wide strategy. Without a DOD-wide strategy, DOD risks inconsistencies between the Armys and the other services prepositioning strategies, which may result in duplication of efforts and resources. In addition, we could not determine the extent to which the reconstitution of the Armys prepositioned stocks is reflected in DOD funding requests nor identify the cost estimates for restoring these prepositioned equipment sets. For example, Army officials could not provide a breakdown of the 3.3 billion cost estimate in the fiscal year 2007 supplemental budget request to reconstitute the prepositioned stocks removed from ships. Army officials stated that the estimated cost to fully implement the prepositioning strategy would total somewhere between 10.6 billion and 12.8 billion between fiscal years 2008 and 2013. However, DODs funding requests for reconstitution are difficult..
